The Floral Way

A living memorial to local servicemen and women of all wars, Wakefield's lovely Floral Way stretches along the perimeter of its Old Burying Ground. Those who today enjoy its serene beauty would probably be surprised to be told that part of it was a public dump in 1896, and later was the site of the old Porter-Milton ice house. From these inauspicious beginnings would come the Way, landscaping at Veteran Field, and the construction of Hall Park.

The Floral Way began in 1948 when Mrs. Archibald Hume, then resident and hostess of the Hartshorne House, conceived the idea of creating a mini-"cherry blossom" circle around Lake Quannapowitt, similar to Washington's Tidal Basin plantings. She took her idea to the late Gardner Campbell, then managing editor of the Wakefield Daily Item, and her brain child took flight.

A committee was formed, with Robert F. Fitz as chairman, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Campbell; Edward Beyea, representing American Legion Post; Wilfred Lemos, Fraternal Order of Eagles; Charles Butler of the West Side Social club; Mrs. Howard S. Glynn, of the Garden Club; Mrs. Harry Goodwin, Gold Star Mother; and Mrs. Hume, with architect Harland A Perkins as a consulting member.

The proposal to beautify one of the community's most attractive locales, the lake area, was enthusiastically received. Early on, it was established that the proposed Floral Way would be a living memorial to those who gave their lives in the service of their country. The Wakefield Garden Club, which has been a dedicated benefactor over the years, assumed sponsorship.

The response from the community was quick and cooperative, with participation from individuals as well as from local organizations. By spring, 1949, the first flowering trees were purchased. The original Hume idea of cherry trees had to be modified. The Massachusetts Horticultural Society advised that the climate here and the exposed location would be more favorable for flowering crabtrees. The committee, eager to see its project bloom, chose the largest trees recommended by the nursery for successful transplanting.

Throughout its life, the Floral Way has seen additional plantings and improvements, and has achieved recognition far beyond the boundaries of the community. In 1951, the Better Homes and Gardens Magazine awarded the Floral Way a plaque in its annual nation-wide competition for civic improvement. The Garden Club each year celebrates the flowering of the trees with its annual Floral Way Festival.
